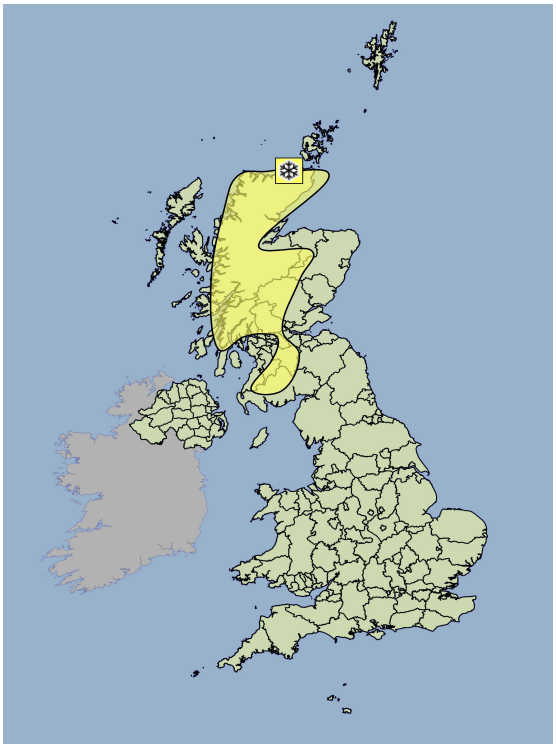
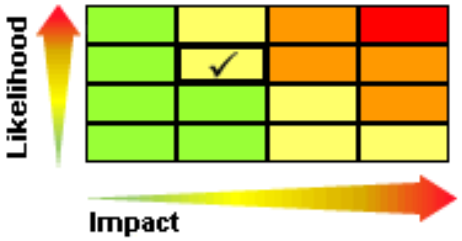
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Cold air will move across the UK on Sunday following a frontal system. Within the cold air frequent showers will form and push into western parts of Scotland in particular, these showers falling primarily as snow above around 200 m with a mixture of hail, sleet and snow to lower levels. Accumulations of up to 5 cm of snow are possible around 200 m, with some temporary slushy accumulations below this, and accumulations of 10 cm or more possible above 400 m.

Icy stretches in association with the showers are also likely as well as difficult driving conditions due to strong winds and blowing snow.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow

Valid from 00:15 on Sun, 07th Dec 2014 until 12:00 on Mon, 08th Dec 2014

Showers will affect western Scotland on Sunday and into Monday morning. These showers will fall as snow, particularly above 200 m with a mixture of hail, sleet and snow to lower levels. Accumulating snow may lead to travel disruption through the region. Icy stretches are likely to form on surfaces, as well as strong winds leading to reduced visibilities and poor driving conditions.

The public should be aware of the potential for disruption to travel on Sunday and into Monday morning.

This is an update to the Alert originally issued on Thursday to change the position of the tick in the risk matrix and adjust the snow amounts/elevations.
